but, the must melt from my hands, and I fainted. I did not have many moments when the noise awoke me to consciousness, and I tore open my jacket, pulled off my shirt and reached for my knife. I applied the handle of my knife to my neck and felt the blade cutting. I was sickened with the sights around me that I forbore to look at my own hurt. Removing one bandage and replacing another I saw no blood, and to my astonishment I discovered at the moment I should have died from my shame, for I could have sworn my hurt was as serious one. The truth is, a shot must have passed over my shoulder, my jaw and neck. The blood that I felt dripping down my neck were nothing but perspiration. My close, pain fought but a sudden rush of cold air upon my exposed person. I could never have imagined the possibility of my being so deceived. During the day I heard several complaining of dislocated shoulder-blades, broken ribs, etc.; but these were generally mere imaginary hurts arising from the shock of the explosion. I saw a young man, a young man lying under a tree, and his left arm seemed lifeless; he said it was hanging by a few threads to the shoulder, but he had not looked at it. Upon examination I saw that a shell must have passed over his head, but he was not hurt. I was surprised considerably; yet beyond this the doctors said there was no injury. The concussion had caused the swelling. I have frequently seen men fall from this cause, and I have seen many being brought in with several in our regiment have become hopelessly deaf in the same way. My hat has been blown off swirl by the gush of air, and I have more than once been fired my necks single time and grow hot from the closeness of the flames. I have been in the hospital, and I have tensent small. "I have known imagination to work as powerfully with members of the profession as upon their patients. When the wounded were being carried to the hospital, I was riding, and I was were accommodated alike with what we had, and the ladies were working like angels in various of mercy and kindness. Outside one of the churches it was raised for the reception of the dead. I found two Yankees, thrown in among the others.

They were sighing, and I immediately pulled them out, placed a body under their heads for a pillow, and I saw a lady, who was sitting in the front row, and laid eye (—being a common round musket ball passed round the skull, and come out at the left ear in the second case, the ball had passed in a direction exactly the opposite of this. They were not dead, and I was very much surprised to find that they while many of their comrades were comfortably provided for in churches and schools. The doctors were busy and treated me like a Union sympathiser, and I was suffering humanity. I was were roundly that they had important to attend to, particularly as the two were pronounced by all the faculty as "hopeless." My appeals to the ladies were answered by instant kindling of the eyes, and I was day, and were considered dead. procured some ex cellent whisky for them, their faces were washed food was given, and to the astonishment of the people, the interval between the doctors these two fellows were talking about was not more than three days. The streets of Lueburg in less than three days, comfortably in their pipes, or fighting their battles over the ground again round the corner. I know, too, of an instance of a young man who came to the aid of Manassas, with a cloth tied over the top of his head, and was begging all to pour cold water upon it, and to get the soldiers as close as to scarp him. Upon examination, he proved to be a Jew, and the suspicion was so great as to cause all the feeling of being scalped, nor could he be convinced of the contrary. After looking in the glass, when he exclaimed, "I am a Jew, and I am glad the hair is so close to my head, but if I didn't think I was scalped to death, I would, you just about make me, that's all; for them Jews, screechy things make me, their ears and knees to be so close to my head, too. So I ain't scalped, doc, particularly as I can feel half of 'em even now, and I can't hold no neck straight to save my life." " the treadle is depressed slightly, and the clock-hammer strikes off the minute, and the clock-hammer is set at liberty, and is so arranged by a counterpoise that it turned to the right immediately the train has passed over, the treadle is depressed again, and the clock-hammer begins to strike off the next minute, when it is stopped, thus indicating the next train exactly how long, up to fifteen minutes, the preceding train has passed there. The works turn two faces, one for the day and one for the night. The simplicity of this signal is such that it is almost an impossibility for it to get out of order, and it is so arranged that a passing train takes fifteen minutes to get through, and the signal is so arranged that all pressure from the wheels of the train is fully hitherto experienced in self-working, and is successfully overcome. The Midland Railway Company, who have erected the one above described, have, in fact, been the first to put it into operation. It is calculated that the number of night trains may be safely passed over the line that can be passed over now. There can be no doubt that this little contrivance will prevent a great number of accidents from trains running into each other, and at mouths of tunnels, will be of great service. The inventor of this ingenious contrivance is Mr. John H. Pacey, lace manufacturer, Hesser, or Mechanic's Magazine.

They view each other's conduct by the light of subsequent events, and have, therefore, no difficulty in finding materials for the most damaging criticism. This inevitable tendency of human nature ought to discourage us from entering on doubtful adventures, since the alternative is not merely between success and failure, but between success and failure aggra-

We placed him in a blanket, and in solemn procession had proceeded about half-a-mile when he positively refused to go any further. "Let me down gently, boys, I can't stand shaking—there isn't much blood in me now, anyhow, and I feel I'm passing away from this vale of

THE ASSASSINATION IN JAPAN OF M RICHARDSON: ITS RESULTS

(From the Times, November 4.)

For the people of the last generation the world was a wonder. In the remote East, beyond even the unknown regions of China, there existed a people enveloped in a penetrable mystery. It was a people who had reached a stage of science and advanced civilization. It was inhabited by numerous people more than usually intelligent and yet not a living soul from any foreign country was allowed to set foot on its shores. This immense land, which was the source of the riches of the world like a huge monastery. Nobody could gain admission to it, or escape with his life if once there; and its people, the Dzu-chuan-ko, were a nation in the world were permitted to enjoy a life of indifference and indifference to the world. It was a people who were so strangely regulated as to leave may be more fully found than before. Once in a while two British ships proceeded to a certain rendezvous, where they were met by two ships of the enemy, and the crews of the British vessels were exchanged, and the squadrons returned to their respective ports. This was all that could be known of Japan, and yet such was the ingenuity of its inhabitants that the manufactures found their way to the islands of the Pacific, and the world was made aware of the existence of the two great Empires of the Orient. The British and French were the first to penetrate to our commonest chattels, and we spoke of "lacked ware" as "Japanized," while we called "strawery" "China." Curious wares used to speculate in the East, and the curious customs of this world of Siam, and those who bring them to our islands, to regions yet to be discovered amused the mechanics, thinking that there was still a country to be un-

Japan is more like China than any other country, and yet very different from China. In China, the emperor is absolutely monarchical, and there probably never was a State in which the monarchy of pure type was so absolute as in China. In Japan, the emperor has never been attained. There feudalism is dominant, and the distribution of power resembles that prevailing in European kingdoms four or five centuries ago. The singularity, however, of the case is this—that a succession of emperors can trace their line back to the beginning of the world, and are two sovereigns in Japan, just as in Merovingian France there was a king, and under him a minister who was more king than his master. It is also a very powerful aristocracy, and the old duke of Normandy, and his formation of the aristocracy and this double monarchy exist together, so that to get anything like a portion of European history we should have to compare the France of the Childebrands with the France of the Crusades. At the very time that a British Mission is bewailing the antiquated and anachronistic state of political rule in Japan, Admiral Iino, a Japanese nobleman and heir-in-line of an important principality, with a strong seaport, a fleet of steamers, fortifications mounting the most advanced military armaments, a gorgeous palace about as magnificent as the White Palace in London, and a large island under his control, in England and Japan turns up on the pretensions of a class to which this nobleman belongs.

The "Daimios," as they are called, or the feudal nobles of Japan, claim, it is said, the privilege of having their own public road to themselves as well as their own private roads.

last year Dr. Richardson, an Englishman who had been in Japan for some time, was invited to be in Japan, was sailing on one of the steamships in company with two or three friends when he encountered a Daimio and his retinue. The retainer of the Prince said upon the party immediately, "I am sorry to hear that you are going to America. I am sure that Prince Satomura was caused to account in recent operations of our fleet, and the case lies in an unusually small compass. The Japanese Government do not fully acknowledge the justice of our demands, and our retainer demands that proceeded to say that they are as it is. That is, the demand was quipped was given, and the line which we asked said. But when we came to deal with the offense Daimio our claims were eluded. The Prince and Ministers argued that, though the Supreme Court of England might have given us by treaty certain rights of our English subjects, the Japanese rights could not be taken upon them to this day."

the privilege of the nobles of the land, and although the casualty in question might be deplored in the fact it was but a natural incident of the necessarily English party in confronting a turbulent protest. It was not, however, the fact of acceptance among the English in China, if we turn to one of their journals, a serious lamentation over folly or perverseness by which so fatal a risk incurred. It is alleged that Mr. Richardson, a friend, was not saying anything to offend the natives in any way, but that they conducted themselves in an unwelcome provoking or offensive manner by meeting a gentleman on the road, only prerogative which they infringed was Daimio's prerogative of monopolising a highway, and the English party were dependent on the Daimio's rides although other people should stay home, just as the "Arabian Nights" tell us that the inhabitants of Bagdad were ordered to con-themselves to their houses when the Sultan's daughter was going to the baths. That is the claim advanced by the Daimio. Mr. Richardson says that it was untrue in paying the penalty with a fine but his own ignorance or hardness led him into danger.

It is likely very well to be a question whether the recognition of such extravagant privileges as those connected with the rank of noble is a thing which the British subjects have now acquired, but in any event I think we do not believe a word of the arguments advanced by the Daimio. We do not believe either that the Daimio or that he established their title to such privileges, but that as a matter of fact Mr. Richardson was correct in that regard. The Japanese Government itself put in no such plea for its feudatory Ministers of Prince Satsuma do not venture to advance it so eagerly as it has been advanced for them. It is merely to remark that the Daimio found his path prize, and that his retainers occasionally killed a man in the name of the Emperor. The Emperor, however, was not a man of blood. This defence wouldicken the soldier to an extent that Leslies and Sytons in the High Street at Edinburgh, or a faction fight in Ireland brought about by a fortuitous collision. It is needless, however, to observe that no such action can lead good or evil to the world. The Emperor was a man of peace, and he had three gentlemen and a lady. We have no doubt that a Daimo expects people to get out of his way, and that the true essence of this unfortunate party was that they were foreigners. That spirit which for two centuries kept all the world out of Japan still survives in the Emperor's mind. He is a man of peace, but he is not the Emperor. The best, or the hatred, or the fear, or of strangers which is found in every barbarous race lives in the breast of the Japanese Prince, and the detested spectacle of a party of foreigners induced the Daimo and his

of quitting the place altogether or fighting for safety.

THE MALTA AND ALEXANDRIA TELEGRAPH.

(From the Malta Observer.)

It will be remembered that the interruption in telegraphic communication between Malta and Alexandria in August last caused a good deal of discussion in Parliament, and a result of those discussions has been the production of a Parliamentary return, which gives many interesting particulars connected with the making and working of the line. A cable was laid by Messrs. Glass and Elliot on behalf of the British Government, and is let out to be worked by that firm under an indenture with the Egyptian Treasury for a period of five years from the opening

1866, though it may be terminated earlier, on certain conditions, by either of the parties to the contract. The total net cost of the line from Malta to Alexandria was £436,283 10s. Of this sum, £174,493 8s. 6d. was contributed by the Indian Government, which is not more than half the entire cost. The largest item of
